the question is more important than the answer

Love, Not Atonement

Last Easter, I was sent an article. It was adapted from a book by Richard Rohr (Eager to Love: The Alternative Way of Francis of Assisi, p183-188). I've edited it a little to make it my own, but thought others might find it interesting. Thanks to the person who passed it on, the unknown blogger, and Richard Rohr.

The common Christian reading of the Bible is that Jesus 'died for our sins' - either to pay a debt to the devil (common in the first millennium) or to pay a debt to God the Father (proposed by Anselm of Canterbury, 1033-1109). Anselm's infamous Cur Deus Homo has been called 'the most unfortunately successful piece of theology ever written'. After Anselm, Christians have paid a huge price for what theologians called 'substitutionary atonement theory' - the strange idea that before God could love us God needed and demanded Jesus to be a blood sacrifice to atone for our sin-drenched humanity. With that view, salvation depends upon a problem instead of a divine proclamation about the core nature of reality. As if this male God could need payment, and even a very violent transaction, to be able to love and accept 'his' own children - a message that those with an angry, distant, absent, or abusive father were already far too programmed to believe.

The incarnation of God and the redemption of the world could never be a mere mop-up exercise in response to human sinfulness, but the proactive work of God. Jesus did not come to change the mind of God about humanity (it did not need changing)! Jesus came to change the mind of humanity about God. God in Jesus moved people beyond the counting, weighing, and punishing model, that the ego prefers, to the utterly new world that Jesus offered, where God's abundance has made any economy of merit, sacrifice, reparation, or atonement both unhelpful and unnecessary. Jesus undid all notions of human and animal sacrifice and replaced them with his new economy of grace, which is the very heart of the gospel revolution. Jesus was meant to be a game changer for the human psyche and for religion itself. When we begin negatively, or focused on the problem, we never get out of the hamster wheel. To this day we begin with and continue to focus on sin with this repulsive and primitive idea of blood sacrifice, when the crucified one was pointing us toward a primal solidarity with the very suffering of God and all of creation. This changes everything. Change the starting point, change the trajectory!

We all need to know that God does not love us because we are good; God loves us because God is good. Nothing humans can do will ever decrease or increase God's eternal eagerness to love.

So please can we ditch Anselm's folly that Jesus 'died for our sins' and accept God's grace as a free and unconditional gift, and then live life in joy and service, with purpose and love as Jesus did.
