I am seeking election to the General Synod. I am committed to serving the Church and contributing to its mission in an increasingly diverse society. As an ethnic minority member of the Church, I bring both lived experience and a strong belief that the Church is enriched when all voices are represented in its governance and decision-making.

My faith has shaped my commitment to inclusion, justice, and service. The Church has a vital role in fostering communities where every individual is valued, respected and able to contribute fully. Greater representation of minority ethnic members is important not only for equity, but also for strengthening the Church's understanding of the communities it serves.

In my professional role as an educator, I collaborate with people from a wide range of backgrounds and have developed skills in leadership, communication, collaboration, and advocacy. I would bring these skills to the General Synod, approaching discussions with integrity, humility, and a willingness to listen to diverse perspectives.

My experiences have given me a deep appreciation of both the opportunities and challenges involved in building truly inclusive communities. Diversity is a gift from Anesu Muyambi.

God and that the Church has an important role to play in fostering belonging, understanding, and unity across different cultures, backgrounds, and generations.

My commitment to service is rooted in my faith and in my desire to see the Church continue to grow as a welcoming, compassionate, and outward-looking community. I am keen to contribute thoughtfully to discussions on mission, ministry, discipleship, and the challenges facing the Church today. I would seek to listen carefully to different viewpoints, engage respectfully in debate, and work collaboratively to find solutions that strengthen our common life together.

I am particularly passionate about encouraging greater participation from underrepresented groups, including ethnic minority communities, younger people, and those who may not always feel that the Church speaks for them or understands their experiences. I believe the Church must continue to engage meaningfully with the diverse society in which we live while remaining faithful to its Christian calling and values.

If elected, I will serve with humility, openness, and a commitment to representing the views of those whom I serve. I would work to strengthen relationships across the Church, champion inclusivity and equality, and contribute positively to shaping a Church that reflects God's love for all people. I will seek to contribute constructively to the work of the Synod and wider church, supporting the Church's mission, promoting meaningful inclusion, and helping to ensure that all members feel heard and valued.

I am committed to working with others to build a Church that reflects the diversity of God's people and faithfully serves future generations. It would be a privilege to serve on the General Synod and to contribute to the life and witness of the Church in this important role.
