

Christmas Reflections

It's that time again when commercialism seems to dominate our every other thought. There are the presents, the food, the cards etc. But we know better, don't we? For those of us who call ourselves Christians 'Jesus is the reason for the season'.

So we again have the opportunity to step aside from all the expectations which are either put upon us or which we take on board ourselves. Can I invite you to join with me on December 14th at 2.30pm for a time of reflecting on the wonder and joy of what Christmas is really all about.

One of my favourite carols begins

'You left you throne and your Kingly crown when you came to earth for me'.

How wonderful is that?

We will share communion together and so it will be good if you could provide bread and a wine substitute in order to share together. Last year we used a hot cross bun as the bread, looking at the significance of Easter and Christmas together; if you would like to do that it would be good.

I look forward to joining with you on Zoom on that day.
