Sándor Végh, the great Hungarian violinist, founded the International Musicians Seminar in 1972, believing the remote location on the Atlantic coast in Cornwall to be charged with energy which could inspire and reinvigorate musicians - a unique atmosphere far removed from the stresses and strains of a musician's busy travelling life.

For 50 years, IMS Prussia Cove has been bringing many of the finest musicians from across the globe to west Cornwall to explore the rich legacy of chamber music in a three-week Open Chamber Music seminar. This is an opportunity for musicians to come together and explore the repertoire in a totally unpressured atmosphere, with young students playing alongside more experienced professionals. The concert programmes are decided by the musicians during each week of rehearsal, and the concerts give audiences a chance to hear a wide variety of chamber music pieces performed at the highest level.

Every year, following the September seminar, a group of musicians specially invited by Artistic Director Steven Isserlis take part in a national tour, which starts in Cornwall and brings the work done by IMS to a wider audience.
